Crypto trading fees is a charge that is attached when you are buying or selling crypto currencies. Trading fee is needed by crypto companies to keep the blockchain network running and to provide people with transaction validation services. Operating a business facilitating crypto transactions costs money, and trading fees incurred by users transacting business in cryptocurrency are the primary source of income for exchange and other service providers.

Trading fees vary greatly depending on various factors, such as type of transaction, the payment method and the blockchain on which it takes place. For example, Coinbase charges fees between 0.5% and 4.5% of the amount transacted.

Types of Crypto Trading Fees

If you are trading cryptocurrency, there are 2 types of fees you will encounter when conducting trade transactions. Here are 2 types of crypto trading fees you should be aware of.

1. Miner Fees

Miner fees are designed to incentivize miners and validators to confirm cryptocurrency transactions. Miner fees typically will fluctuate depending on how many transactions are waiting to be processed and added to the current block.

2. Service Fees

For a crypto exchange to make money, it needs to attach service fees from transactions. Services fees or also can be called as network fees are usually charged by the third-party service providers that facilitate transactions. This type of fees are charged over and above any network-originated fees paid to miners.

How to Minimise Crypto Trading Fees

To improve profits and make transactions faster, there are a number of ways users can reduce crypto trading fees, such as.

1. Choosing Your Transaction Time

Time of day you transact in cryptocurrency will have a significant impact on how much fees you will need to pay. You can avoid peak usage time for blockchain transactions are at the highest such as during daytime and working hours.

2. Watch Your Transaction Amount

Many cryptocurrency exchanges will charge a percentage of the amount you traded. For example, if you are currently executing a $10,000 trade transaction with a 0.10% trading fee, you might incur a $10 fee. In some cases there are some exchanges that will charge you using a flat fee.
